“The applicant has not made it plausible that, because she speaks publicly about torture, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, or about the death penalty or execution, the United States is personally unsafe for her. From her statements and the documents submitted, it does not appear that she lacks access to legal remedies in the United States. The applicant herself states that she has conducted various legal proceedings, both civil and criminal. Public sources indicate that the applicant in principle receives protection from the authorities, or higher authorities, in her country of origin, for the problems she has raised.”

Refutation / Legal Response

This statement is factually and legally incorrect.

The evidence provided to the IND — including court transcripts, published online records, and affidavits — demonstrates ongoing persecution and state-level retaliation following my public testimony about U.S. government involvement in sex trafficking networks linked to Jeffrey Epstein and Deborah Palfrey.

Access to “legal remedies” in the U.S. does not equate to protection when the judges, prosecutors, and police are complicit in the persecution. My court cases were manipulated — hearings held in my absence, false psychiatric findings entered, and audio evidence erased. These actions constitute systematic denial of due process under Article 6 of the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR).

The IND’s conclusion that I am “protected” ignores the state-complicit nature of the persecution, a condition specifically recognized under Article 3 ECHR and UNHCR Handbook paragraphs 65–68, where the persecutor is a state actor and legal recourse is futile or dangerous.

Therefore, I have proven beyond reasonable doubt that the United States is not a safe country for me, as I am being targeted by officials in positions of power who are immune from prosecution within the same system that abuses me.

“Weliswaar heeft betrokkene dagvaardingën overgelegd, het betreft hier echter commune delicten. Betrokkene kan niet worden gevolgd in haar stelling dat er een causale relatie zou zijn tussen de dagvaardingën en haar publieke uitingen rondom de Epstein-zaak. Dit is slechts gebaseerd op niet-onderbouwde vermoedens. Betrokkene heeft vervolgens de rechtsgang niet afgewacht maar heeft haar land daarvoor verlaten.”

G B English Translation

“Although the applicant has submitted summonses, these concern ordinary criminal offenses. The applicant’s assertion that there is a causal link between the summonses and her public statements regarding the Epstein case cannot be accepted. This is based only on unsubstantiated assumptions. The applicant subsequently did not await the legal process but left her country for that reason.”

Refutation / Legal Response

This conclusion is entirely false and contradicts both the evidence I submitted and the established record of events.

The charges referred to as “ordinary criminal offenses” are in fact fabricated legal instruments used as a tool of persecution and intimidation by U.S. state actors following my whistleblowing on the government’s role in the Epstein and Palfrey trafficking network.

The evidence includes:

Court transcripts and recordings showing that hearings were held in my absence, violating my right to a fair trial.

A psychiatric evaluation confirming I was mentally competent, yet disregarded by the court to declare me “insane” to discredit my testimony.

Affidavits from U.S. officials, including from Joseph F. Auletta, verifying his direct knowledge of the trafficking operations and the retaliation against me.

To dismiss these cases as “commune delicten” (ordinary crimes) is a serious mischaracterization of politically motivated prosecution. My departure from the United States was not an attempt to evade lawful proceedings but an act of self-preservation from a system proven to be weaponized against me.

Under international refugee law (1951 Refugee Convention, Article 1A(2)), persecution can manifest through the misuse of criminal law. The IND's reasoning ignores this principle and thereby violates the standard of non-refoulement under Article 33 of the Refugee Convention and Article 3 ECHR.

Betrokkene heeft aangegeven geen paspoort te hebben kunnen aanvragen, de reden daarvoor is echter, zo verklaart zij, gelegen in praktische problemen.”

“Furthermore, the fact that the applicant was able to obtain a driver's license in 2023 without any problems does not indicate that she is under the special attention of the authorities in her country of origin. The applicant stated that she possesses multiple driver's licenses issued in various states. The applicant indicated she was unable to apply for a passport, the reason for which she explained was due to practical difficulties.”

Refutation / Legal Response

This assessment is superficial and misleading.

The ability to obtain a driver's license is not indicative of safety or freedom from government targeting. The United States' system of internal documentation is automated, and state motor vehicle databases operate separately from intelligence, judicial, and federal systems.

I have repeatedly demonstrated — through sworn statements and court filings — that the barriers to obtaining a passport were not “practical difficulties” but obstructions and restrictions intentionally placed upon me by law enforcement and administrative bodies to prevent my travel and escape from the U.S. jurisdiction.

I specifically testified that:

The Brunswick, Maryland passport office displayed signs reading “No new applications accepted” for months.

I was without transportation and under threat of arrest by officers linked to Edward Norris and Joseph Gamble, preventing safe travel to other offices.

Outstanding warrants fabricated under false charges were used to criminalize my movements and block access to travel documentation.

The IND's inference that normal bureaucratic function implies safety fails to recognize that systemic retaliation can coexist with superficial administrative normality. This error undermines the reality of coercive control, a hallmark of state-enabled persecution.

“Tot slot heeft betrokkene op een gecontroleerde wijze haar land in september 2025 kunnen verlaten. Dezerzijds kan concluderend betrokkene niet worden gevolgd, in het licht van het bovenstaande, dat de Verenigde Staten voor haar geen veilig land zijn.”

GB English Translation

“Finally, the applicant was able to leave her country in a controlled manner in September 2025. Therefore, it can be concluded that the applicant cannot be followed in her assertion that the United States is not a safe country for her.”

Refutation / Legal Response

This is a misleading and dangerously incomplete interpretation of the facts. The manner in which I left the United States was not controlled but executed under coercion, duress, and imminent threat.

I boarded a cruise ship under false security after learning that U.S. police from Talbot County, Maryland, in collaboration with Virginia officers, had attempted to break down my door. I fled to avoid arbitrary arrest, disappearance, or murder — outcomes consistent with the prior treatment of whistleblowers and trafficking victims in similar cases.

The IND's description of my departure as “gecontroleerde wijze” (controlled manner) distorts the truth. My exit was a desperate act of flight, not a lawful, voluntary, or safe departure. The fact that I physically managed to leave the country alive does not negate the existence of persecution, nor does it prove the country's safety.

This reasoning directly violates Article 33 of the 1951 Refugee Convention, which protects those who flee in irregular or urgent circumstances from being penalized for the method of their escape. The IND's conclusion disregards both the psychological trauma and the physical danger that forced my exit and thereby invalidates the assumption of “safety.”

“Verder heeft betrokkene zich niet gemeld bij de autoriteiten van Aruba, welk door het cruiseschip als eerste is bezocht, om bescherming te verzoeken. Betrokkene heeft verklaard te hebben begrepen dat Aruba sterke banden zou hebben met de Amerikaanse overheid, waardoor zij ervoor gekozen heeft om haar aanvraag op Bonaire te doen. Betrokkene heeft verklaard dit te baseren op de informatie die zij heeft ontvangen, maar heeft dit verder niet gespecificeerd.”

GB English Translation

“Furthermore, the applicant did not report to the authorities in Aruba, which was the first destination of the cruise ship, to request protection. The applicant stated that she understood that Aruba had strong ties with the American government, which is why she chose to submit her application on Bonaire. The applicant stated that she based this on information she received, but did not specify further.”

Refutation / Legal Response

This point misrepresents my well-founded fear of persecution and rational decision-making under threat.

My choice to disembark on Bonaire instead of Aruba was based on verifiable geopolitical realities — Aruba’s formal dependency on U.S. law enforcement and intelligence cooperation, particularly through the DEA’s Forward Operating Location at Reina Beatrix International Airport and joint operations with the U.S. Southern Command.

It is therefore objectively reasonable, not speculative, that Aruba would have immediately repatriated me to the United States, exposing me to imprisonment or death. Bonaire, under the Dutch Caribbean administration, was the first territory where I could reasonably expect neutrality and potential safety.

My understanding of these facts came from official U.S. publications and diplomatic statements, not hearsay. The IND’s assertion that I “did not specify further” disregards that these statements were explained verbally during the interview and corroborated in my written statement.

Thus, the IND’s dismissal of this decision as “unspecified” demonstrates a failure to assess risk contextually and proportionally, contrary to the UNHCR’s Procedural Standards (para. 202–205) on evaluating the credibility and reasonableness of an applicant’s fear of refoulement.

NL Original Dutch

“Van een persoon die stelt bescherming nodig te hebben van autoriteiten buiten het land van herkomst mag verwacht worden dat deze zich onmiddellijk bij aankomst in een veilig land meldt bij de autoriteiten. GB English Translation

“A person who claims to need protection from authorities outside their country of origin is expected to report immediately upon arrival in a safe country. Therefore, the applicant’s statements regarding Aruba are considered insufficiently substantiated and are dismissed.”

Refutation / Legal Response

This reasoning ignores the trauma-based realities of persecution survivors and the context of my escape.

As documented in my interview transcript and asylum statement, I was in a state of severe fear and physical distress. I did not know the local procedures or that Bonaire and Aruba were treated differently in asylum jurisdiction.

Under Article 31 of the Refugee Convention, asylum seekers must not be penalized for irregular entry or delay in reporting to authorities, especially where fear, confusion, or lack of procedural knowledge is involved.

Moreover, I did in fact report myself to authorities within days, as evidenced by my email to ACSCuracao@state.gov on 20 September 2025 and subsequent contact with the Bonaire police on 23 September 2025.

The IND’s argument that I did not act “immediately” fails to recognize that a six-day delay under trauma does not invalidate a genuine claim for protection. This reasoning constitutes a procedural violation of non-penalization for irregular entry (Refugee Convention Article 31) and misapplication of proportionality in procedural assessment.

NL Original Dutch

“Voorts heeft betrokkene verklaard in contact te zijn geweest met het Amerikaanse consulaat via het e-mailadres ACSCuracao@state.gov. Uit het feit dat betrokkene zelf contact heeft opgenomen met deze instantie volgt dat zij de mogelijkheid had om bescherming te vragen bij de Amerikaanse autoriteiten, hetgeen zij niet heeft gedaan. De correspondentie toont bovendien geen enkele aanwijzing dat betrokkene in gevaar verkeerde of niet terug kon keren naar de Verenigde Staten.”

G B English Translation

“Furthermore, the applicant stated that she was in contact with the U.S. Consulate via the email address ACSCuracao@state.gov. From the fact that the applicant herself contacted this institution, it follows that she had the opportunity to seek protection from the U.S. authorities, which she did not do. The correspondence furthermore shows no indication that the applicant was in danger or unable to return to the United States.”

Refutation / Legal Response

This paragraph deliberately misrepresents the content and purpose of my contact with the U.S. Consulate.

My email correspondence with ACSCuracao@state.gov was not a request for protection but a documented report of persecution and threat, sent as a matter of record because I was being hunted by government-connected perpetrators.

The IND’s interpretation that my contact “proves access to protection” is false and dangerous. In fact, contacting the U.S. Consulate exposed me to increased danger. I specifically informed the consular officer that returning to the United States would result in retaliation, imprisonment, or death due to my testimony about government-linked trafficking networks.

The IND’s assumption that the U.S. Consulate could provide protection ignores the doctrine of state complicity. When the persecutor is the state itself, internal protection is unavailable — a principle affirmed in UNHCR Handbook §98–100 and CJEU Case C-255/19, Secretary of State for the Home Department v OA (Nigeria).

Additionally, the IND’s statement that “no danger is apparent from the correspondence” is inaccurate. My attached affidavit and asylum statement clearly explain that I avoid using explicit detail in communications with U.S. government offices for my safety. This omission of detail cannot be interpreted as absence of danger; it is evidence of fear-based self-censorship, recognized in ECHR case law (e.g., R.C. v. Sweden, App. No. 41827/07).

Therefore, the IND’s claim that this correspondence disproves danger is invalid and contradicts the established principles of international refugee assessment.

“Additionally, the documents do not show that the applicant has turned to any human rights organization or international body to report her situation. Nor does it appear that she has taken steps to file a complaint regarding the alleged abuses, such as sexual exploitation or persecution by government officials. This undermines the credibility of her claims.”

Refutation / Legal Response

This statement is false and negligent in light of the documentation I provided.

I have in fact contacted and submitted information to multiple international bodies and journalists, including but not limited to:

- The International Criminal Court (ICC) — communication recorded under my name regarding state-linked sex trafficking.
- The Office of the Inspector General, U.S. Department of Justice, with direct evidence of retaliation and falsified court proceedings.
- Multiple journalists and legal professionals in Washington, D.C., and Maryland, whose failure to report truthfully further proves the existence of a cover-up by state-aligned entities.

Moreover, my medical and legal records submitted with my asylum packet (Planned Parenthood medical records, Virginia civil complaint, affidavits from Joseph F. Auletta and Aaron Collins) directly prove that I did report and document the abuse through official channels, only to face retaliation, censorship, and criminalization.

To claim that “no complaint was filed” is either a deliberate omission or a failure of the IND to review the attached exhibits. Under Article 4(1) of Directive 2011/95/EU (the Qualification Directive), all available evidence must be assessed cumulatively, not selectively. The IND’s failure to acknowledge my submitted records violates this principle and renders the credibility determination procedurally defective.

N L Original Dutch

“Tot slot heeft betrokkene geen documenten overgelegd die aantonen dat zij gezocht wordt of dat er een arrestatiebevel tegen haar openstaat in de Verenigde Staten. De door haar overgelegde stukken zijn deels onduidelijk en deels niet verifieerbaar.

Derhalve kan niet worden geconcludeerd dat betrokkene zich in een actuele situatie van gevaar bevindt.”

GB English Translation

“Finally, the applicant has not submitted any documents showing that she is wanted or that there is an active arrest warrant against her in the United States. The documents she has submitted are partly unclear and partly unverifiable. Therefore, it cannot be concluded that the applicant is currently in a situation of danger.”

Refutation / Legal Response

This claim is demonstrably false.

The Talbot County Circuit Court case records (D-035-CR-24-002141 and D-035-CR-24-002142) clearly show active felony wiretap warrants issued against me on September 4, 2024, directly tied to the publication of my court recordings. Each warrant carries up to five years per count and a combined maximum exposure of 40 years’ imprisonment for the act of protected speech — namely, exposing corruption and judicial misconduct.

These records are not “unclear” or “unverifiable.” They were obtained directly from Maryland judiciary portals and are cross-referenced in my Statement in Support of Asylum/Protection (Bonaire), section 2, with the official docket numbers and filing dates.

If the IND failed to verify them, that is an administrative oversight, not a deficiency of evidence. These warrants constitute prima facie proof of state retaliation and criminalization of speech, fulfilling the definition of persecution under Article 1A(2) of the Refugee Convention and Article 9 of Directive 2011/95/EU.

Therefore, the conclusion that I am not “in a situation of danger” is legally baseless and contradicted by primary documentary evidence already in the IND’s possession.

NL Original Dutch (for inclusion below the corresponding IND paragraph):

Voorts miskent de IND dat betrokkene wél geloofwaardige en formele stappen heeft ondernomen om bescherming en gerechtigheid te verkrijgen binnen de Verenigde Staten. Betrokkene heeft immers een federale rechtszaak aangespannen tegen de Amerikaanse overheid, waarin zij onderbouwde vorderingen heeft ingesteld betreffende mensenrechtenschendingen, corruptie en ambtelijke betrokkenheid bij seksueel misbruik en mensenhandel. Deze procedure is geregistreerd bij de federale rechtbank in Washington D.C. en bevindt zich thans in hoger beroep. Dat de overheid betrokkene vervolgens heeft gecriminaliseerd en in een psychiatrische inrichting heeft willen laten opnemen, vormt juist een bevestiging van de gegrondheid van haar vervolgingsvrees.

G B English Translation:

Furthermore, the IND fails to recognize that the applicant did take credible and formal steps to obtain protection and justice within the United States. The applicant filed a federal lawsuit against the United States government, presenting substantiated claims of human rights violations, corruption, and official complicity in sexual exploitation and trafficking. This case was registered in the Federal Court in Washington, D.C. and is currently under appeal.

The subsequent criminalization of the applicant and the attempts to declare her mentally unfit are not evidence against her credibility but rather confirmation of the persecution and retaliatory motives of U.S. officials. The misuse of psychiatric evaluation and false criminal charges against whistleblowers is a recognized form of state retaliation, establishing a direct nexus between her political speech and the persecution she faces.

Legal Basis and Relevance

Your federal case demonstrates that:

- You exhausted domestic remedies within the U.S. legal system, satisfying the requirement that asylum is only sought when internal protection is not available.
- You formally alerted the judicial branch of the United States to crimes committed by state actors, and the state's response was punitive, not protective.
- Under Article 4(5) of Directive 2011/95/EU (Qualification Directive) and UNHCR Handbook §196–198, where an applicant's statements are consistent, detailed, and supported by prior legal filings, they must be presumed credible unless clearly contradicted by evidence — which your materials are not.
